

IE - MIT Sloan Dual Degree

Master in Management + Master of Science in Management Studies (MIM-MSMS)

#gobeyond

Objective

This dual degree has been designed for students who want to combine IE Business School's innovative and diverse Master in Management program with MIT Sloan's prestigious faculty and teaching methodologies. At MIT, students can personalize their learning experience and deepen their knowledge in a particular area of management to complete a thesis working closely with a MIT faculty members during this additional 9 month long experience.

The MIT Sloan Master of Science in Management Studies

The MSMS degree is a 90-unit curriculum with a 66-unit requirement to be completed in coursework at MIT Sloan, other MIT departments, and Harvard University. It offers specific concentration topics that combine courses in one of the following three MIT Sloan academic groups:

- Behavioral and Policy Sciences, which offers courses in strategy, technological innovation & entrepreneurship, organization studies, and international management
- Economics, Finance, and Accounting, which offers courses in international economics, applied microeconomics, corporate finance, financial engineering, and managerial accounting, as well as other subjects
- Management Science, which offers courses in operations management, operations research and statistics, information technology, and marketing

Admissions Criteria and Deadlines

Students will apply to both schools separately but have to do the Master in Management program first. There is only one intake of students per year at MIT Sloan which takes place from September until June. Thus, this dual degree is only available to those IE students who will begin their Master in Management program in September or for those who will have graduated from IE Business School when applying to MIT, as applicants from IE will be accepted several years after their graduation. The application deadline for the MSMS is usually at the end of January* of the same year the program takes place and students have to report to MIT two weeks prior to the start of classes.

IE Business School offers a rolling admissions process. As such, there are no application deadlines for any particular intake. However, given the limited number of places in the program and the diverse student body, it is highly recommended you present your application approximately one year prior to program commencement.
